

Oreteti. Connecting humans to God

Article

Published Version

D'Angelo, L. (2020) Oreteti. Connecting humans to God. Visual Ethnography, 9 (1). ISSN 2281-1605 (Video) Available at <https://centaur.reading.ac.uk/92266/>

It is advisable to refer to the publisher's version if you intend to cite from the work. See Guidance on citing.

Published version at: <http://www.vejournal.org/index.php/vejournal/article/view/227>

Publisher: Altrimedia Edizioni

All outputs in CentAUR are protected by Intellectual Property Rights law, including copyright law. Copyright and IPR is retained by the creators or other copyright holders. Terms and conditions for use of this material are defined in the End User Agreement.

www.reading.ac.uk/centaur

CentAUR

Central Archive at the University of Reading

Reading's research outputs online

---

ORETETI. CONNECTING HUMANS TO GOD

Lorenzo D'Angelo, University of Reading

ABSTRACT

This film explores the difficulties faced by a Maasai agro-pastoral community in Tanzania, as a time of climate crisis stimulates cultural and economic changes. Through the voice of Philipo, a young Maasai man, it describes the importance of a rain-making ritual. At the centre of this ritual is a plant that is sacred to the Maasai, the Oreteti. This is not a common plant in the semi-arid regions of East Africa. Often, it is found near water sources – particularly valuable for agro-pastoral communities, especially during drought. For this reason, the Oreteti is associated with the possibility of overcoming difficulties in times of crisis, as well as with fertility and women. It is no coincidence that women play a fundamental role in the rain-making ritual; without their presence and their prayers, it would lose its meaning.

The film bears witness to a crucial change in Philipo's community, a change that also affects the meaning and indeed the existence of the rain-making ritual. Much of Maasai cultural life revolves around pastoral rites and symbols. Indeed, the Maasai consider and define themselves as "people-of-the-cattle", although, over several generations, they have increasingly added activities such as agriculture to their livestock keeping in response to shifting economic and political circumstances. In Philipo's village, the arrival of the Lutheran Church and successive famines and droughts have accelerated processes of change. As Philipo himself points out, all of this, in turn, has had palpable effects on economic decisions and cultural choices as well as on gender relation. Ultimately, this changes the meaning of the Oreteti ritual itself.

In conclusion, we are presented with a reflection by a young Maasai on how his community can overcome current difficulties, given that connections between humans, and between the human and the divine, have been exposed to new meaning.

Keywords

Maasai, Tanzania, climate change, rain-making ritual, pastoralism, church, women.

BIO

Lorenzo D'Angelo is a senior postdoctoral researcher at the University of Reading interested in natural resources and extractive industries, environmental and economic anthropology. Lorenzo is co-founder and co-convenor of the EASA Anthropology of Mining network and has conducted field research in Sierra Leone, Uganda, and Tanzania. In Tanzania, his ethnographic research focused on agro-pastoral systems and climate change among Maasai communities.

<https://reading.academia.edu/LorenzoDAngelo>

<https://www.reading.ac.uk/apd/staff/l-dangelo.aspx>

l.dangelo@reading.ac.uk

Lorenzo D'Angelo, University of Reading

Produced and directed by Lorenzo D'Angelo

Edited by Eugenio Giorgianni

Narrated by Philipo Kaai Laitayock

Camera operator: Baraka Danison

Filmed at Mkuru, Uwiro Village in Tanzania (January 2019)

Watch video with Italian subtitles here: <https://youtu.be/B6zxIYHU19o>

Watch video with English subtitles here: https://youtu.be/rWr3\_DpP5fE